According to Micah Projects Coordinator Karyn Walsh, the film highlights the countless community members who have generously given their support to Micah Projects.

"Literally hundreds of people have given freely of their time, talents and donated goods to assist us in our campaigns," says Karyn. "The citizens of Brisbane are rightly part of the solution to the problem of homelessness."

"We're absolutely thrilled with Peter's work," says Karyn, "and we hope that as many people as possible get to see it."

About Micah Projects

Drawing on local and international experience, local not-for-profit organisation Micah Projects has developed a number of innovative programs designed to tackle homelessness from a number of different angles.

"We're great believers in 'an ounce of prevention'", says Karyn. "Early intervention has been proven to stop people becoming homeless in the first place, and to lessen the impact of homelessness on the most vulnerable members of our society."

"We also provide a suite of ongoing services designed to break the cycle of homelessness," says Karyn, "services that can help people get back on their feet, maintain stable accommodation and, wherever possible, obtain employment."
